IMPORTANT.
Another Revolution in Spain.—We are indebted to the politeness of a gentleman of this city for Trinidad papers containing the following important particulars of another revolution in Spain.

TRINIDAD, June 25.

Yesterday evening arrived in this port the polacre ship L'Orient, after the short passage of twenty days from Gibraltar.

We regret that this paper was so far advanced before the public prints received by this occasion were put into our possession, that we cannot gratify our readers with an account of the important intelligence they exhibit, respecting the fate of the Spanish monarchy, now in all probability annihilated by the treachery of the Corsican.

PORT SPAIN, 27th June.

We hasten to perform the promise inserted in our ordinary of Saturday last, by laying before our readers the most extraordinary intelligence that has ever been produced by political events, to astonish the universe.

One of the first empires on the Globe, extending over both hemispheres, its dominions, on which the sun never sets—this colossal power—this transcendant throne and its immense treasures, all is abandoned. All is resigned to the monarch—and to whom? to a foreigner! to a foreigner who has deceived him—subjugated him—disgraced him—and whom he does not blush to call his friend, his loyal and faithful ally!!

Read! mark! learn! O beloved Britons (and Americans) and let the base partizans of the Tyrant now apologize for him if they can.

MADRID GAZETTE EXTRAORDINARY
Saturday, April 9, 1808.

His excellency Don Sebastian Pinuela, has communicated under yesterday's date, the following royal order to his excellency the president of the Council.

Our lord the King has just received credible intelligence of his intimate friend and august ally, the emperor of the French, and king of Italy, being already at Bayonne, for the purpose of the most agreeable, valuable and flattering to his majesty, namely: that of entering these kingdoms, with views in which his majesty perfectly concurs, and of known utility and advantage to his beloved subjects. And, it becoming the most intimate friendship, happily existing between the two crowns, and the most high character of his imperial and royal majesty, that his majesty should go to meet and compliment him, and to give him the most sincere, positive and constant proofs of his intention and resolution to keep up, more and more, a close and good intelligence, intimate friendship, and advantageous alliance, which have happily prevailed, and shall prevail between these two monarchs, his majesty has resolved speedily to set out for the purpose of this flight. And, as all persons who are indebted to said estate, and hereby requested to pay the same to us the said subscribers without delay; and all those having any legal demands against the said estate, are requested to present the same, duly authenticated, to the said subscribers, on or before the first day of August next, as on the 10th a final dividend will be made, his majesty has laid the strongest injunctions to that end, and principally in the new created board of government, over which his most serene highness the infant Don Antonio is to preside; and that they will maintain, as they are bound to do, the peace and harmony that has hitherto subsisted between them and the troops of his imperial and royal majesty, punctually supplying them with whatever they may want for their subsistence, with which they proceed to the points where they intend to go, for the great advantage and happiness of both nations: His majesty giving the most positive assurances, that there is no apprehension whatever of the least tranquility, good intelligence and advantageous alliance being disturbed or altered; instead of which his majesty is fully convinced, that it will grow more and more solid every day.

(Signed) SEBASTIAN PINUELA.

GIBRALTAR, April 23, 1808.

We have been favored with the following translation of a letter from the count of Espeleta, captain general of Catalonia, to his excellency gen. of division Duhesme, commanding in chief the corps of observation of the Eastern Pyrenees:—

BARCELONA, 13th March, 1808.

SIR—The troops in the citadel, and forts of Monjui, may consider the whole of this city as my hostages, and all its provisions as theirs. They have nothing more to do than, one thing to expect, except in so far as having a common interest with the town and Spanish inhabitants. Your excellency occupied these fortresses, in the name of the emperor and king, as an ally; and as such, the Spanish government consented to the occupation of them by your troops, with the greatest good faith and confidence. With the same sentiments, it has opened to you and the army under your command, its treasuries, its resources, and the bosoms of its families, in order to afford you a hospitable reception, and to share with you the food destined for its own use.

Military laws prescribe the mode of supplying garrisons, when it happens that they are either engaged in hostile operations, or are besieged, or when scarcity in the country is threatened, which obliges the general commanding to take precautions for the subsistence of his troops, by establishing depots.—But, exclusive of those circumstances, this measure only serves to create suspicion and distrust. Neither my conduct, nor the constant moderation of my troops give me favourable reception the French army have met with ought to excite alarm.

The town is provided with supplies of every description, as you will perceive from the annexed official statement of the intendant; and, even although there should be some deficiency, your excellency gives us the strongest assurance, that provisions are collecting at the ports of France, which are to be sent to this country, free of duty.

His majesty the emperor and king, whose worth my name has inspired us with confidence, while his troops occupy our forts, being truly informed of our destitute and honorable principles, will not be well pleased when he hears, that you alarm this city with terrible forebodings, as a consequence for its constant intransitive protect.

Your excellency will be pleased to request the opinion of his imperial majesty respecting your determination, before you carry it into effect, and to accompany your request with this explanation of mine; as I shall lay the business before the king my master, by whose orders, I cannot go to your excellency, while the fort is in possession of the Spanish troops have not.

If, before you receive the resolution of the emperor, your excellency should find grounds for living with precaution, and under the influence of fear, in the forts which at present are to be considered as forming part of it, on, then the measure you propose will be resorted to with propriety. But, in the meantime when no such necessity exists, I will impress on your mind, that it will serve no good purpose to supply the forts with stores if they are to be considered as intending hostile or offensive; and that it will not be in the power of your excellency, or myself, to remedy the consequence of the sensation which such a measure must excite among the inhabitants.

Your excellency will be pleased, to assure of my most high consideration, May God preserve you many years.

The count of ESPELETA,

MADRID GAZETTE, May 13, 1808.

Circular Address of the Council of Castile to the Provinces.

You have, for twenty years together, been united with unexceptionable loyalty, the august monarch of Spain, ever treading in the steps of your forefathers; you have made suitable returns to his paternal love, and shared the just concern which the council expressed to his majesty respecting his abdication, on the day following that on which it took place. If we published his successor's accession to the throne, it was merely to comply with his supreme commands. We would have long continued in the path faithful to that majesty, if we had understood that his abdication and resignation of the crown was not accompanied with the requisite spontaneous freedom.

Ever since Charles IV. made it known that this abdication had been forced from him, and that he deemed himself fully entitled to resume the crown, the board of government, the council of Castile, and the whole nation, have been anxiously waiting for the decision of a question of such high importance; and the council have examined with the greatest attention, the documents upon which the power of an umpire who has been appointed for that purpose, has grounded his determination. The most important of these are subjoined here; and, in the opinion, for med by the council, they have the certainty that they have not deviated from that line which the august party himself would have adopted, if from the peculiar circumstances had not opposed that concert. It is undoubtedly unfortunate that the union of the Fathers of his people has not yet taken place; but this misfortune will prove less distressing to the French branch here, as the result of the late events holds out flattering prospects for the future, and the nation will shortly be enabled to proceed, with steady steps, in the career of her happiness and prosperity.

These hopes begin to be realized, since the king has appointed to supply his place in the government of these kingdoms, a prince who, without any other interest than that of Spain, already evinced by his beneficent and unremitted exertions at the head of his army, associates himself with eagerness and the most suitable means, to whatever is conducive to the glory and felicity.

The board of government, which shares in the sentiments of the council, has viewed the crisis of the preceding events in the same light, and consequently determined to adopt, with the wisdom of the tribunal, and to which it subscribes without restriction, as the fulfilment of the irrevocable decrees of Providence, which never forsakes a religious people, attached to their sovereign and to the laws by which they are governed.

The principal documents quoted, and which the council had taken into consideration at a meeting held on the 6th instant, in the presence of their excellencies marquis Cabellero, don Pco Gil. and Gonzalo O'Farril, members of the board of government, are the following ones:

PROTEST OF CHARLS IV.

"Dearest brother—On the 19th of last month, I put into the hands of my son a decree of abdication.—On the very same day I entered a solemn protest against the decree which had been issued in the midst of wild commotions, and forced from me by the critical circumstances of that period.—Now, that tranquility is restored; that my protest is in the hands of my august friend and faithful ally, the Emperor of the French and King of Italy and it is notorious, that my son could not produce his imperial and royal majesty to acknowledge him in that capacity.—I solemnly declare that the deed of abdication which I subscribed on the 19th of last month, is null and void in all its parts; and, therefore, it is my will that you should make it known to all my subjects, that their good king, who loves them, wishes to dedicate the remainder of his life to unremitted exertions for their happiness, provisionally confirm in their situations, the members of the supreme board of government, and all the civil and military officers who have been appointed ever since the 19th of March last. I intend to go and meet my friend and ally, the emperor of the French, king of Italy; after which I will send further orders to the board.—San Lorenzo, April 21, 1808.

I THE KING.

To the supreme board of Government."

Letter of his Majesty the emperor of Austria to his Royal highness the Prince of Asturias.

"Brother—I have received your Royal highness' letter. The inspection of your royal father's paper, must already have convinced you of the affection I ever bore him; under the present circumstances, you will see how me to speak to your highness with frankness and candor. I entertained a hope, that upon my arrival at Madrid, I might persuade my illustrious friend to make some necessary reforms in his dominions, and in some degree to gratify the public opinion.—The prince of peace's decision appeared to me requisite for his happiness and that of his people. The events in the north have retarded my journey. In the mean time the occurrence at Aranjuez have taken place. I do not set up for a judge of what has happened, nor of the conduct of the prince of peace; but, what I know is, that things should never ensue that subjects to shed blood, doing themselves by
